From Jane Jacobs to Livable Cities

Fifty years of Public Life research leading gradually to implementation of people-oriented planning strategies in cities across the world: Copenhagen, Melbourne, London, New York and Moscow, among others. The Livable cities of the 21st Century are characterized by a strong focus on sustainable modes of transport supported by a good public realm. Care for people and the public realm are seen as an important key for creating lively, safe, sustainable and healthy cities.

Two recent books by Jan Gehl, Cities for People (2010) and How to Study Public Life (2013), will serve as departure points for the presentation.
